Beck Feiner is an illustrator, designer and author living in Sydney Australia.

In the last five years, she's become a mother of two. Levi and Esme are her everything, and she quickly realised, while trying to teach her oldest the alphabet, that there was nothing out there that encouraged true and real engagement. It's hard to bond over B is for banana

So, Beck set about creating an A to Z that she could use to teach Levi his ABC, while having meaningful conversations around each of those 26 letters.

That alphabet was the Aussie Legends Alphabet. Each letter wonderfully became an icon, of the human variety, in Australian culture. Soon, Levi didn't just know his Alphabet, but he also knew all about the many larrikins that make Australia so great.

With the world of social media what it is, it wasn't long before people in Beck's Instagram circle were asking for their own copies. One thing led to another and before too long the poster and the book was selling around Australia and to ex-pats abroad. Beck appeared on TV and radio talking about her idea and why it was resonating with so many parents and children around Australia.
